

6.1 Residential Development

Residential building permits issued in Leon County declined sharply again in 2007 after near record totals just two years ago (2005). The number of detached single-family home permits fell 18%, attached single-family (townhomes) permits remained level while multi-family permits rebounded (up 58%) in comparison with 2006 levels. The year 2007 saw the fewest permits issued in a year in Leon County for new construction of single-family units (detached and attached) since 1985 and the fewest single-family detached permits issued in a year in twenty-five years (1982).
